DID YOU KNOW THAT

- * Used oil generated by changing your car's oil is recyclable. In fact, motor oil never wears out; it just gets dirty.
- * You should NEVER dispose of used motor oil by pouring it down the sewer, dumping it on the ground, or putting it out with the trash!
- * Used oil from a single oil change can contaminate one million gallons of fresh water, if allowed to seep into the ground.
- * Toxic substances found in oil, such as lead and chemical additives can find their way into our lakes, streams and coastal water ways if not properly managed.
- * Used motor oil can be recycled one of three ways:
 - reconditioning—cleaned (filtered through a commercial filtration system extending the life and use);
 - reprocessing or re-used—treatment to remove water or particles so that it can be burned as fuel to generate heat or electricity for commercial operations (turbines, power plants, cement kilns);
 - re-refining—processes to remove impurities so that it can be used as base stock for new lubricating oil for motor vehicle use again (good as new).

- * Recycling used motor oil helps to protect the environment, by conserving a valuable petroleum resource.

NEVER mix other substances such as antifreeze, paint thinner or parts cleaner with your used oil! This will contaminate the oil making it harder to recycle, and much more costly to dispose of. First, check with your local service station or garage.
